FRIGHTFUL HAVOC.

Wrought by the Cyclone Fiend at Pomeroy.

ITS PATH TRICKS WITH CORPSES

The Town Annihilated and Nothing But a Black Mark Its Site.

Pomeroy, Feb. 10, 1888.

Fifteen hundred and twenty men, women and children were brutally murdered and their homes levelled to the ground with a single bound of the fiendish tornado that devastated Pomeroy, Ohio, yesterday afternoon.

The town seemed to rise up in a wave of destruction when the storm broke with a roar and a shriek that left nothing but a black mark of desolation on the landscape. Whole families were left struggling in the ruins of their earth caves, while the cyclone swept through the town, leaving not even a token to shun.

The body of an unknown man, apparently over 60 years old, was found among the ruins of the town, lying on the street. His clothing was torn and his body bruised, but not enough of it was left to identify him.

The tragedy began at noon, when the town was hit by a tornado that spread over the town like a prairie fire, destroying everything in its path. The cyclone was followed by another, which lasted for several hours, during which time it swept through the town, leaving not even a token to shun.

There is scarcely a house left standing, and the streets are strewn with the bodies of the dead and the wreckage of the buildings.

Numerous companies have been sent to the town, and the work of removal is being carried on with all possible speed.

CRIME UNDER THE CONSPIRACY.

The town is the scene of a great crime, and the authorities are determined to bring the perpetrators of the deed to justice. The papers will give the case in detail.

The citizens of Pomeroy will never forget the horror of the day, and will ever bear witness to the memory of those who perished in the storm.
